Spaces for different activities

The fact that the physical environment has a major impact on safety, well-being and quality of life is particularly evident in healthcare spaces. Over the course of a day, a variety of activities take place, with each space requiring supportive interior design to contribute to an attractive and functional operation. Devoting time and engagement at the beginning of a project enables you to create an interior design solution that facilitates, stimulates, invites and promotes wellbeing and creates a sense of security. For both staff, care recipients and relatives.

Get inspired by examples of different spaces, all based on a set of values founded on empathy, understanding and respect. We're here to help you, whatever your starting point – from needs analysis and interior design solution to delivery and follow-up.

Entrance

The first impression of a care environment comes from the entrance. Here, the interior design makes everyone feel welcome and included, while also reflecting the organisation's brand, image and values. It's a place where relatives, care recipients and staff can sit down and wait, meet and socialise. The space is easy to navigate and ideally includes elements that awaken the senses, for example through smell, visual impressions or sound.

Lounge / Waiting area

The lounge or waiting area is a space where relatives, care recipients and staff can sit while waiting for an activity, or just sit down and socialise. In this important space, the interior design creates a homely, non-institutional feel, which makes people feel comfortable and secure. It's a good idea to supplement the space with positive distractions that can shift thoughts away from negative impressions, for example through smell, visual impressions or sound.

Restaurant / Café

The restaurant/café can be designed in different ways, depending on the size and purpose of the operation. Whether it's a café for patients and staff, or a restaurant where visitors can also eat, it's important that the interior design is inclusive. The interior needs to be adapted to suit people of all sizes and with different needs, so that everyone feels welcome.

Important factors when placing sound absorbers on the wall:

- Quantity in relation to size of room

3 tips for creating an inviting corridor:

- Furnish with small oases of seating, easy chairs or benches with spaces to put things down
